“Poletown Lives”

The story of how a Detroit neighborhood named ‘Poletown’ fought the destruction of their homes by General Motors. The people of this Polish working class neighborhood had to fight when General Motors with the help of the government wanted to destroy their homes to build a parking lot for their new plant. The film shows the courage of the people, and how they organized, demonstrated, and even got arrested, to hold onto their neighborhood, their home. It’s a familiar story of government cooperation with corporate greed, destroying our lives in the name of their profits.

Ralph Nadar says about it, “An engrossing film on the corporate state in action. The film is a must.”
